Born in Berlin, NJ, moved to Pleasantville, NJ sometime after his parent's death to live with brother Robert, worked first as butcher, then with the New Jersey Central Railroad, and then with the Gulf Oil Corporation, retiring in 1958 after 35 years. He also worked a second job as sexton at various Methodist churches (Cape May Court House, NJ.; Lakewood Methodist Church; Pearson Memorial Church in White Horse, NJ; as well as at the Central Baptist Church, Trenton, NJ); and a third job as superintendent of an apartment/office building on Second and Lexington in Lakewood, NJ.

My first recollection of my father dates to about 1932 or 33 when I was six or seven. We lived in Cape May Court House, NJ, just a small un-sophisticated town. Our home was in "the Joseph's House "- which we called it. Apparently Dad rented it from a Mr. Joseph. It was on Mechanic Street just a bit West from the Main Street, which was Route #9. The American Store - a small grocery store - was on the corner. Dad worked at the Gulf Oil Company office about a half-mile west from our home, and he walked to and from the office where he was a clerk. Visiting with him there, I remember seeing him take a long measuring pole marked with numbers, insert it into one of the large gasoline tanks elevated horizontally on a platform, and record the contents daily. Obviously he was a bookkeeper.

At the end of the day, we would go out front of our house and watch for him to come walking home. Then we would run up the street to greet him. On one day, he came home to find me selling lollipops, just waiting for someone to buy them. When he asked me the price, I told him they were a penny a piece. He asked me how much I paid for them. The reply was a penny a piece. He said that I would not make any money that way. His suggestion was for me to go to the American store and buy three chocolate bars of different kinds, which could be purchased for a nickel a piece or three for ten cents. If I bought three for a dime and sold them for a nickel a piece, I could make five cents for every three I sold. I tried it and it worked. In fact, I continued this enterprise until I was thirteen or fourteen, even when we moved to Lakewood. I had regular routes and would knock on people's doors and go to places like gasoline stations or anywhere I might make a sale. I became known as "the candy boy."

My next recollection of Dad was when he drove us to the opening of "The Ocean Drive," a new highway leading from Cape May to Atlantic City across several bridges that connected the shore-barrier islands areas without going inland. Up to that time it was necessary to travel from Route #9 to each island separately by a mainland-to-island bridge. This would be the case when traveling from North Wildwood to Stone Harbor or from Avalon to Sea Isle City, and Strathmere to Ocean City. The new Ocean Drive connected these places with five bridges.

Dad knew that it was an historical occasion and wanted to be a part of it. I don't remember which bridge we crossed, but I do remember waiting in line for the ribbon to be cut. I guess that some of his interest in such things was passed on to me. It was in 1976 that s 75th Birthday celebration was held on the Benjamin Franklin Bridge connecting Philadelphia and Camden when I, along with my son-in-law Jim Mellon, and grandchildren Jessie and Chris Mellon, walked the span. Midway at the top of the bridge, a formal anniversary celebration took place. That year also was my 75th birthday.

When I was six or seven, Dad was transferred again by the Gulf Oil Company to Lakewood, NJ. We lived in a rented house on County Line Road three doors from the New Jersey Railroad that ran from New York to Lakewood to Camden. The house I remember was two stories with a detached garage and back yard. Dad's office was a short walk from home and we would often meet him coming home after a day's work. He had a Whippet car and used it to go to the Methodist Church in town where he had a second job as the sexton - called janitor in those days.

Dad was meticulous in making sure that the church was always spotlessly clean and warm in the winter. The whole family pitched in to help. Many were the Saturday nights, after supper, when the final cleaning took place. One of my jobs was to sweep the back stairway to the Sunday school class rooms on the second floor. I remember that Dad would check my work after I thought I was finished only to hear him instruct me to go back and clean the corners of the steps. He would say, “This is the house of the Lord, and we must keep it clean.” One of his favorite Bible verses was Psalm 84:10, "I would rather be a doorkeeper in the House of the Lord than to dwell in the courts of the wicked one."

Though Dad was a Christian in the best sense of that term in wanting to follow and serve Christ in every way possible, he didn't take a public role such as Mother did in teaching, singing, and being a strong leader in church and community organizations. Nevertheless, his Christian witness was very positive. Profanity never crossed his tongue. He never smoked nor drank alcoholic beverages. Always, at every meal, Dad would say grace. Family prayer was normal. His influence was subtle and strong.
